I want to twist it. I can draw and cut a rectangular plate from plywood with a 45 degree bend. When I press together the corners, one corner will be heavier than the other corner. The heavier side will naturally press towards the center of the joint. But this is a flat plate. I want my floor to curve as I work. So how do I build it? The first step is the design. We can't really think about it until we think about how we want to lay our floor. The more the floor curves, the more square edges we'll have. The less the floor curves, the more rectangular it will be. To decide, I think about the shape and size of room I will use my floor in. If it's a living room, it's best to curve the floor towards the center of the room. If it's a study, I'd want to curve towards the walls. So. The first step is the design. In my server-side project (typescript), I am using this method to send encrypted data. However, if the data is too big, it won't send due to timeout. Is there any way to cancel the request from the client side? A: At the backend, you can respond to request timeout and redirect the user to a "More Info" link to explain the issue. At the client side, you can cancel the request in onbeforeunload event. But there is no real cancel request in JS. But, this is not exactly what you want to do since your assumption is that you want to send the data to avoid request timeout. I assume that you want to send your data with all the same encryption. In this case, the backend should probably receive a request with this data and update the data in the database. If you want the data to be encrypted and the user will be able to download the encrypted data in case of timeout, then you can save the data in a cookie and decode it on the client side. Gambler's Lament The Gambler's Lament was a ballad by A.E. Housman. "The Gambler's Lament" was set to music by the English composer Edward Elgar in 1893. Housman's verses, composed in January 1894 and published in February the same year, appeared in the Guardian, a daily newspaper. Elgar based his score on them, though the verses had been published under Housman's name in January, and thus the composition was mistakenly credited to him. The verses are from The Shropshire Lad.
